Mrs. Marie Wheat, daughter of Major Thomas E. Moss, was today admitted to the bar of McCracken county, and granted license to practice law. Hons. E. W. Bagby and Q. Q. She passed an excellent examination, and is the first woman licensed to practice law in McCracken county.

She received her first case today, being appointed to defend in the divorce suit of Mrs. Pearl Smith against Mark Smith, Jr. The petition was filed today, and allegations abandoned.

The new play was on at the Peacock last night and a good house greeted the company. "Chattanooga" is a soul stirring conception. The idle auditor can get no pleasure out of it. The heart and eye must work in unison to appreciate the beauty of the plot, and when you become interested the devil couldn't drive you away from the playhouse. "Chattanooga" charms, excites, amuses.

It is presented by an unusually strong, evenly-balanced cast, and is to be ranked with the very best of the civil war dramas. The lines are bright and sparkling. The action of the play is laid in the south, during the opening of and throughout the civil war. Such attention has been paid to detail that no essential ins and outs are missing.

HALLOWE'EN PRANKS.

There Were Quite a Number of Them Last Night.

Hallowe'en was observed last night to a much greater extent than was expected by a great many citizens. There were a great many masqueraders out attired in grotesque costumes, and gates were transposed from one yard to another in many parts of the town, especially on West Broadway. Some of the alleged pranks amounted to almost vandalism, but it would be almost impossible for the police to discover any clue to the perpetrators.

There were also a number of watch parties in the city, and more than one young lady saw her intended husband by means of the various characteristic methods of the night.

HUSBAND AND WIFE

After Forty Years the Widow Looks Upon the Beloved Form.

Many years ago I read a pathetic story. I do not remember all the details of the incident which so impressed me, but the chief facts were these: A married couple were crossing one of the great glaciers of the Alpine regions, when a fatal accident occurred. The husband fell down, one of the huge crevasses which abound on all the glaciers—the rope broke, and the depth of the chasm was so great that no help could be rendered, nor could the body be recovered. Over the wife's anguish at her loss we must draw the veil of silence. Forty years afterward saw her, with the guide who had accompanied them at the time of the accident, staying at the nearest hotel at the foot of the glacier, waiting for the sea of ice to give up its dead; for by the well-known law of glacier progression, the form of her long-lost husband might be expected to appear, rolled from the mouth of the torn watched and waited, and their hope was at last rewarded.

One day the body was released from its prison in the ice, and the wife looked again on the features of him who had been so long parted from her! But the pathos of the story lay in the fact that she was then an old woman, while the newly-rescued body was that of quite a young and robust man, so faithfully had the crystal casket preserved the jewel which it held so long. The 40 years had left no wrinkles on that marble brow. Time's withering fingers could not touch him in that tomb, and so, for a few brief moments, the aged lady saw the husband of her youth, as he was in the days which were gone forever!—C. H. Spurgeon's Autobiography.

HOW TO WIN.

In this busy world people miss many good and enjoyable things because they do not know of them, never saw, heard or read of them. Here is a lack of proper publicity and promotion, in a word, advertising. A thousand manufacturers and distributors are plugging along in an almost profitless rut because they consider printer's ink an expense to be avoided on all sorts of pretense, when it is really a judicious and profitable investment. Yes, an investment, a paying investment that earns money while you sleep. Reputation gained at the cannon's mouth may be a "bauble," as Shakespeare says, but "Reputation" in the commercial world is a nine-time winner. If a man could live a thousand years and avoid the cost of life insurance he could afford to wait for the world to come to him, but as it is, he must be brief and busy to attain success. He needs all available helps to promote his business and not the least of these is advertising. No man can make a living buying his own goods and selling them to himself. He might turn his stock over pretty rapidly, but the war and tear would quickly impoverish him.—[Interstate Grocer.]

THE LAW WAS DESIGNED FOR FRAUD AND CORRUPTION.

Mr. Goebel, in his Glasgow speech, said that the fundamental reason for the passage of the present Kentucky election law was to prevent the perpetration of frauds, which were possible under the old law, because of the fact that then there was no requirement for an equal division of the election officers. The present law is held to be especially designed to overcome the deficiency. Let us see about this, says the Louisville Commercial. The appointment of these election officers was, under the old law, confined to the county judge. Section 1577, Kentucky statutes, provides that "any officer upon whom a duty is imposed under this chapter and no penalty provided for the violation thereof, who shall willfully neglect to perform such duty, or who shall willfully perform it in such a way as to hinder the objects of this law, shall be punished by a fine of $50 and imprisonment in the county jail for two months."

The law was plain and adequate, proper penalties were provided for its violation, and yet it is not record that Mr. Goebel, or any of his party friends, ever undertook a prosecution of men on the charge of not holding to its mandates.

Was the Goebel law designed to remedy this so-called deficiency? Was that the purpose of the law, as claimed by its author? Had an amendment to the old law been passed providing that in future the county judge must appoint as democratic election officers in the various precincts such qualified persons as the democratic county chairman might recommend, and such republican election officers as should be recommended by the republican county chairman, then this deficiency would have been easily overcome.

Suppose, too, that the amendment had also provided that if the county judge failed or refused to appoint such qualified persons as these two chairmen should recommend to him, he should forfeit his office, be fined not less than $1,000 and confined in the penitentiary not less than one year? Does any one doubt that this would easily and effectively have accomplished all Senator Goebel says his law aims to do?

And does not the fact that he failed and refused to take this shorter and easier way to that end, and insisted on taking the longer and more difficult one exemplified by the Goebel law, suggest to thinking men that there was some other purpose in view than the correction of imaginary irregularities in republican counties?

We say "failed and refused to take the shorter route" advisedly, for Senator William Henry Jones, of Barren county, at the same season introduced a bill to amend the election law along the line we indicate. He mentioned in his speech supporting the bill that it was similar to the Ohio election law. Then it was that Senator Goebel rose in his place, denounced the Ohio election law as an outrage, Ohio elections as a stench in the nostrils of decent people, and denounced Senator Jones' bill, which was defeated. Yet today Senator Goebel is telling the people that the law of which he is the author is in substance the same as the Ohio law.

Manifestly the Goebel law has some other and ulterior purpose than to compel an equal division of precinct election officers throughout the state. What that purpose is can best be guessed by the character of the law itself and the means employed to pass and to sustain it.

LITERARY NOTES.

John Ruskin, the greatest writer of any age on questions of art, is approaching the end of his life at his home in Coniston, a helpless and semi-wreck of his former grand self. For the past nine years, at long intervals, word has come from England that Ruskin was mad. The latest report has it that he is not precisely mad, but that he is afflicted with the imbecility that sometimes accompanies old age. He takes no further interest in the subjects that he once loved to study and write about. The picture he presents is one of uttermost sadness, of a fine mind broken, an active body bowed, a noble character blotted out.

Harold Frederic's "Damnation of Theron Ware" has been spoken of since the author's death as only comparatively well known in this country, but it is the opinion of many who follow literary popularity in the United States that it has had, and is still having, a great run.

In England, where it was published under the name "Illuminations," and where, by the by, it boasted a flattering preface by Mr. Gladstone, it was possibly not quite so prevalent as it is here. The Lexington Leader has the following to say of the Third Kentucky:

"There are troops which have had hardships to contend with at the front, both at Santiago and Porto Rico, but none can lay claim to having seen more active service in this country than our own Third Kentucky. Since the day this regiment was called to go to defend the country until the present time the boys of the Third have always been ready to respond to the call to go to the front. That they have met with disappointment is not the fault of the men comprising the regiment. Many of them fully expected to eat their Christmas dinner in Porto Rico, and at Newport News when the order was given to embark for foreign shores there was great rejoicing among them. Now that there is prospect of being sent to Cuba the members of this regiment are feeling more cheerful, and all express themselves as pleased with the plans so far outlined."

At Camp Hamilton the Third Kentucky regiment is conveniently located.

But camp life is not to the liking of the enlisted men, who are anxious to make a reputation in the war which will make all Kentuckians feel proud of them. The officers are as eager as the enlisted men to see actual service, and have left nothing undone toward having this regiment among the first ordered to Cuban shores. Whether to Havana or Santiago, they are all ready and anxious to go.

Health of the regiment is greatly improved over what it was when it arrived here, and with the recruits taken in since the Second Kentucky has been mustered out each company will be enabled to go to the front with its full number of men, which is a better record than many of the volunteer regiments can show, and makes the boys feel encouraged to believe they will be among the first to leave the shores of the United States.
